meat and dairy production and consumption are in crisis globally 70 billion farm animals are used for food production every year it is well accepted that livestock production is a major contributor to greenhouse gas emissions the food and agriculture organization of the united nations fao predicts a rough doubling of meat and milk consumption in the first half of the 21st century with particularly rapid growth occurring in the developing economies of asia what will this mean for the health and wellbeing of those animals of the people who consume ever larger quantities of animal products and for the health of the planet itself the new edition of this powerful and challenging book explores the impacts of the global growth in the production and consumption of meat and dairy including cultural and health factors and the implications of the likely intensification of farming for both small scale producers and for animals several chapters explore the related environmental issues from resource use of water cereals and soya to the impact of livestock production on global warming and issues concerning biodiversity land use and the impacts of different farming systems on the environment a final group of chapters addresses ethical and policy implications for the future of food and livestock production and consumption since the first edition published in 2010 all chapters have been updated three original chapters re written and six new chapters added with additional coverage of dietary effects of milk and meat antibiotics in animal production and the economic political and ethical dimensions of meat consumption the overall message is clearly that we must eat less meat to help secure a more sustainable and equitable world pulses provide valuable products for animal feeding and thereby indirectly contribute to food security in order to promote the use of pulses and their by products in regions where they are often wasted this publication highlights the nutritional role of beans vetches lentils and peas for different animal breeds and looks at the necessary climatic conditions for cultivation air pollution policy is closely connected with climate change public health energy transport trade and agriculture and generally speaking the earth has been pushed to the brink and the damage is becoming increasingly obvious the transport sector remains a foremost source of air pollutants a fact that has stimulated the production of biofuels this book focuses on the biodiesel industry and proposes a modification of the entire manufacturing chain that would pave the way for further improvements oil derived from oilseed plantations crops is the most commonly used feedstock for the production of biodiesel at the same time the uk s royal academy of engineering and 178 scientists in the netherlands have determined that some biofuels such as diesel produced from food crops have led to more emissions than those produced by fossil fuels accordingly this book re evaluates the full cycle of biodiesel production in order to help find optimal solutions it confirms that the production and use of fertilizers for the cultivation of crop feedstocks generate considerably more ghg emissions compared to the mitigation achieved by using biodiesel to address this fertilization challenge projecting future biofuel development requires a scenario in which producers shift to an organic agriculture approach that includes the use of microalgae among advanced biofuels algae s advantages as a feedstock include the highest conversion of solar energy and the ability to absorb co2 and pollutants as such it is the better choice for future fuels with regard to the question of why algae s benefits have not been capitalized on for biofuel production our analyses indicate that the sole main barrier to realizing algae s biofuel potential is ineffective international and governmental policies which create difficulties in reconciling the goals of economic development and environmental protection in both islamic and non islamic countries many population groups worldwide such as vegetarians and people of the jewish faith consumers do not eat pork amongst these groups consumers are concerned about importing processed food which may contain or has been contaminated with pork or swine derived products this is especially true of halal foods in muslim communities where the foods may be prepared or processed utilizing one of more non halal ingredients halal and kosher foodstuff play an incredibly important role in the muslim and jewish diet economy and health this makes halal and kosher food product quality safety and shelf life preservation a major topic in these communities and for the manufacturers of halal and kosher food products halal and kosher food integration of quality and safety for global market trends covers a wide range of important topics in halal foods including quality standards safety of food additives antimicrobial and veterinary drug residues aflatoxin in feedstuff application of hazards analysis and critical control points haccp
